

J E N S C A R L S S O N

Predicting the future with computational chemistry

Jens Carlsson, who grew up in the forests of Småland, first stepped into the halls of academia almost 20 years ago. The realisation that he would devote himself to research came soon after he started studying in Uppsala. And now, after some years in the US and at Stockholm University, he is back in the city where he once began his research career.

